

working lives as an essential expression of our discipleship. These principles pushed Claypot out to “be with” the poor in squatter camps and other areas in Johannesburg. Smith says “being with” the poor is a much better way to describe their ministry than “reaching out” to the poor since he is convinced that the poor and the rich need each other. Being with the poor taught them about community, inequality, and the ways in which many live in abject poverty. Wherever your journey takes you
